

Bring on the incinerator

Mon Jan 28, 2008

To the editor:

The people who are against building a garbage incinerator should probably count the number of garbage bags they leave at the curb or better yet, count the Tim Hortons cups which litter the floor of their vehicles.

An incinerator will bring high-tech jobs to the area, construction workers will have work for a few years and in the end will add revenue to the municipality. We will save on garbage fees and create another resource from the steam that is usually generated from the heat of the burning process.

I wonder how much pollution is spewed into the environment handling the current garbage and how much fuel is wasted trucking the stuff to Michigan. I welcome a waste facility in my community and I hope this project goes full-speed ahead. We need other revenue-generating businesses which can solve an environmental issue and in my opinion this is a very good start.
